How to buy clothes responsibly?

When you buy clothes, there are four ways that you should consider to become a responsible buyer.

A. Shop locally. You may have to pay a bit more for local brands but it's good to support local producers.

Although famous branded products which are sold in international chain stores are often cheaper, the workers that made these products typically work in poor working conditions and are paid low salaries. You should avoid these brands.

B. Make a list. When you go shopping, try not to buy unnecessary clothes by making a list of things that you really need. When you feel like buying another T-shirt, pause before taking out your wallet and look at your list. If it's not on the list, don't buy it. Or you can tell the shop assistant to put it away for you.

C. Choose natural materials. Nylon or polyester fabrics will harm the environment. You can choose to buy clothes that are made from natural material like wool instead. Besides, you should also look for brands that use recycled products.

D. Go for second-hand goods. If you shop in a charity shop, not only can you conserve the environment, but you'll get something original, unlike other products that are mostly seen in chain stores.

26. Local brands may be more expensive than products that are in international chain stores.

27. Workers that create products in international chain stores often receive low salaries.

28. Making a list when shopping can help you to buy unnecessary things.

29. We should not buy recycled products because it will harm the environment.
